MISCELLANEOUS READING. PLANTING AND CULTIVATION OF THE

[Correspondence of the N. Y. Evening Post.] Paris, March 20 .- What the French call 'the planting and cultivation of the sea," and the English, less ambitious in speech, would be content to call "the artificial raising fish," is carried on in France with a perseverance and success which promise to yield very valuable results, and at no distant date. The various operations of modness, Colds and Coughs, Cholie, Corrupt Humers, ern pisciculture, due to the inventive genius of the humble fisherman Remy, and zenlous-DYSPEPSIA.—No person with this distressing ly promoted by the labors of indefatigable isease, should delay using these Medicines imM. Jacques Coste, under the joint auspices Eruptions of the Skin, Erysipelas, Flatulency.
FEVER AND AGUE.—For this scourge of the Western country, these Medicines will be found a system at once easy of application safe, speedy and certain remedy. Other medicines and of almost certain success, and destined, leave the system subject to a return of the disapparently, to render the raising of fish as common as that of kine, sheep, wheat and potatoes. Rivers, lakes and ponds exhausted by the mprovident greed of fishermen and the destruction of the young fry, are stocked from the great raising establishments founded in various departments, and the coast of the Channel, the Atlantic and the Mediterranian are converted into oyster grounds, which threaten, if their tenants continue to multiply as rapidly as they are now doing, to ensure a surfeit of that dainty for the entire population of France.

THE FIRST ARTIFICIAL OYSTER BED .- The first of the great artificial oyster-beds was undertaken by M. Coste, in 1857, in the bay of St. Brienne, on the northern coast of Britanny. The water is there exceedingly deep, and the violence of winds and weather added greatly to the difficulties of this novel attempt. But all these obstacles were successtfully overcome. The entire surface of the bottom of the bay forming the piscicutural farm is covered with fascines, composed of branches of trees strongly lashed together and held down by heavy stones. Between these fascines the bed of the sea is paved with ovsters and muscle shells, pieces of rock, tiles, fragments of pottery, destined to attract the spawn and afford to the youngest oysters a surface suitable to their development. FISH-FARMS.—The success of the experiment at St. Brienne has led to the formation of similar "fish-farms" at Arcachon, the Ile de Re, and in the roadstead of Toulon, all of which are now cultivated with unremitting care, and promise, according to the reports of the periodic inspections to which they are subjected by the agents of the government and by those of the Society of Acclimation, cs, analyzing 11 per cent. Ammonia, warranted to inaugurate a new era in the anuals of fishmarkets, and to create a new and inexhaustible source of national weaith. The last investigations into the state of the oyster-beds of St. Brienne, carried on by members of the Council General of the department of the Cotes du Nord, under the direction of the captains of the Chamois, Pluvier and Eveil of the French navy, placed by the government at the disposition of the commissioners charged to carry on the work of inspection, have given results that have far surpassed the most sanguine expectations of the advocates of the new system. Every time the drag was applied it brought up the following articles: Trimmings and Buttons over two thousand oysters; and each of or all the latest styles; Worsted and Silk Bindings, three fuscines of row No. 10, sunk in 1859, and just brought up for examination, was found to contain twenty thousand young oysters, from three to five centremetres in diameter. These fascines, exhibited in various towns of Britanny created universal amazement, and will probably lead to the establishment of many new heds. They were subsequently brought to Paris for the Emperor's inspection, and lastly were su bmitted to the Academy of Sciences creating there the same feeling of admiration and astonishment which they excited among the simple Breton peasants
